

How aware are you of Arabic culture?

You are sitting on the floor facing your host. What must you never do?

You have been offered tea and your host has refilled your cup many times. You have now had enough. How can you indicate this?

You are with a group of Arabic speaking friends. You feel the conversation is getting tense as voices have been raised. Are they about to have a serious argument and is there anything you can do to calm things down?

You are in Jordan during Ramadan. It's long after midday and you are hungry and thirsty. What should you do?

You are invited for supper. There is no cutlery. What are you supposed to do? And what must you never do?

You are meeting potential clients for the first time. The conversation is all small talk and you want to get down to business. How can you get them to hear about your company's proposal?

You are travelling in the Middle East with your husband. Whoever you meet seems to ignore you. What's happening?

How did you do? If you're not sure, contact us for the answers at smithhalsall@btconnect.com